CALL FOR PAPERS

The Journal of Community Corrections is soliciting articles related to restorative justice programs and issues for the coming Summer and Fall editions. We believe that it is important to keep a spotlight on restorative justice issues in community corrections and the Journal is a good place to maintain that emphasis. Please note that the journal focuses on programs that are community-based (rather than programs in prisons). The International Community Corrections Association looks forward to continuing to build upon shared knowledge with our friends from the National Association of Community and Restorative Justice.

HOW TO PARTICIPATE

• Submit articles to Executive Editor, Donald G. Evans at donaldeva@gmail.com
• Articles should be submitted in word format and should be between 5500 - 7500 words.

Journal of Community Corrections

The official journal of the International Community Corrections Association, Journal of Community Corrections (JCC) is the most widely read and widely respected journal of policy, research, and programs for community-based rehabilitation and treatment of offenders. The original “what works” journal of evidence-based interventions, JCC brings readers the best thinking of today’s foremost experts in articles that are written, designed, and edited to stimulate action and achieve results.
